Respecting Taxpayers' Money.

Our Government believes in delivering value for your tax dollar. That's why we're reforming the public service to make sure it meets the needs of the 21st century, while delivering services at a lower cost to Canadian taxpayers.

For example, we're transitioning the public service to 50/50 employer-employee cost sharing on pensions – meaning that, for the first time, employees themselves will be paying half the cost of their pensions.

“You can count on our Government to keep taxes low and balance the budget in 2015.”

It's time to fix an inefficient system so that Canadian taxpayers are receiving the best value for their dollars and employees have a system that supports them.

We will work with stakeholders to overhaul this fragmented system and replace it with a modern one that seamlessly integrates short- and long-term coverage—a system that ensures robust case management and a timely return to work.

We need a 21st century disability management system for a 21st century workforce. Canadians expect and deserve a modern, high-performing and affordable public service.

This is an important step to ensuring Canadians are receiving the public service they deserve. Tony Clement, who is the President of the Treasury Board, has announced plans to tackle high rates of employee absenteeism and to strengthen support for ill and injured public servants with an ambitious new initiative to modernize the Government's outdated disability insurance plans.
